The latest update to Adobe Photoshop drops the startup time from around 30 seconds down to around 4. That's a big boost for speed. The new editor is also more functional, thanks to the new linear and radial wave brush modes. In the same way that Lightroom integrates with Dropbox, the application now integrates with online JPEG stores, like SmugMug. This definitely saves a lot of time. Selecting a shot and tapping the SmugMug button creates the metadata and then gives you the option to highlight the image for immediate online uploading, submit to the store's review process, or cancel the upload. This enhances the workflow. It also lets you quickly upload shots to SmugMug. One of Photoshop's crowning achievements is its ability to create photo composites. You can combine multiple images into one, with the depth of the images you can blend in your composites retaining a realistic feel. In Adobe Photoshop Elements 8, there is a new tool called Layers that allows you to work efficiently and create lay-ering effects by loading images into their sprite and create new Sprite/Lay-ers. Adobe Photoshop is still the only true professional photo editing software on the market.

But it can't touch Lightroom.

I got rid of Photoshop CS6 about 4 years ago and moved on to LR4. Then got Photoshop CS6 back 4 months ago.

LR4 used to run pretty good for me, but as I upgrade to Photoshop CS6 it's just not the same...
The reason of this is:

1. it's a slow software and it crashes too often.

2. it's always freezing and crashing.

Do any of you recommend me other photo editing software?

Thanks a lot for helping me making the right decision.

Best regards.
